

THE TEXT

- 1- Things have never been the same since our daughter Sophia, who's 13, discovered the Back Street Boys. They have taken control of our life, our house and our daughter. At first, she just read their life story in magazines, collected their photos and walked around happily attached to her personal CD player.
- 2- Then, last November, I got a phone call at work. "Mum ! They're playing a concert at Wembley Arena ! Can I go with my friend Rebecca ? " I wanted to please her, so I agreed. But it was only later that I started to worry. Terrible scenes passed quickly through my mind. I imagined my little girl in a huge crowd of strong fans. I worried what would happen if she got separated from her friend. I feared she wouldn't get up for school the next day. And I was terrified the noise might damage her ears. Perhaps I should accompany them, I wondered.
- 3- So, before I booked tickets, I phoned some friends and asked about their daughters' first concert experience. All advised me to wait for her outside, in a café at Wembley. When the ticket finally arrived she felt so excited. I understand her reasons although it's twenty years since I went to a concert myself.
- 4- To be honest, now the Boys' concert is so near, I wish I could go myself. I know the words of most of their songs, thanks to my daughter singing along and the band looks decent after all.
